The Unseen King

I have come in answer to your prayer. Daniel 10:12 nlt. READ Daniel 10:10-19

Pilgrim is a musical based on The Pilgrim's Progress, an allegory of the life of a believer in Jesus. In the story, all the unseen forces of the spiritual world are made visible to the audience. The character of the King, representing God, is present onstage for almost the entire show. He's dressed in white and actively blocks attacks from the enemy, tenderly holds those who are in pain, and nudges others to good works. Despite his indispensable role, the main human characters can't physically see the King, only the effects of what He does.

Do we live as if the true King is active in our lives, even when we can't physically see Him? In a time of need, the prophet Daniel received a vision from a heavenly messenger (Daniel 10:7) who'd been sent in direct response to his faithful prayers (v. 12). The messenger explained that spiritual warfare had delayed his coming and angelic backup had to be dispatched (v. 13). Daniel was reminded that even though he couldn't see God, he was surrounded by evidence of His care and attention. "Do not be afraid, you are highly esteemed," the messenger encouraged him (v. 19). At the end of Pilgrim, when the main character reaches heaven's door after many tribulations, he joyfully cries out for the first time, "I can see the King!" Until we see Him with our new eyes in heaven, we look for His action in our lives today. By Karen Pimp

It's Amazing How They Keep Track of Lake Erie's Fish Populations

Like it or not, our movements are being tracked in many places for economic, law enforcement, or security purposes. Take for instance the PA Turnpike, where toll booths with individual workers have been replaced by automated license plate readers that either debit your E-ZPass account or mail you a bill for using the limited access highway. Similarly, license plate readers are installed on most Pittsburgh bridges and throughout Allegheny County to track vehicle movements for law enforcement purposes. Then there is high-tech facial recognition software employed at airports and other restricted facilities for security purposes. I'm guessing as AI improves, our future movements will be tracked even more.

Well, I recently learned we're not the only ones being tracked by high-tech means. The final seminar I attended at the North American Wildlife Enforcement Officers Association (NAWEOA) Conference on Friday afternoon, July 18, 2025, was conducted by PA Fish & Boat Commission Fisheries Biologist Mark Haffley. He is the Unit Leader of the PFBC's Lake Erie Research Unit (Unit #9). Mark began with some fascinating statistics from a broad 2020 study on Lake Erie. Keep in mind Lake Erie touches four U.S. states: Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, and Michigan, along with the Canadian province of Ontario. The 2020 study found 550,000 different anglers fished Lake Erie that year. Not surprisingly, 65% of those anglers' efforts were focused on walleye. The total economic impact of fishing Lake Erie was $1.83 B. Focusing solely on PA, 27% of the entire Lake Erie fishing effort came from the Commonwealth and the PA portion of the economic impact was $283.1 M. Here is an incredible fact I learned from Mark. More fish are caught out of Lake Erie each year than all the other Great Lakes combined. This reinforces why it's important to study fish populations in Lake Erie to know what's happening with this vital resource.

The PFBC's Lake Erie Research Unit is part of the Great Lakes Fishery Commission and participates in the Great Lakes Acoustic Telemetry Observation System (GLATOS). GLATOS began in 2010 and currently has 27 active projects, surveying 15 different species, and they are presently tracking 5,000 tagged fish. Here's where it gets really interesting. Under the water of Lake Erie and the other Great Lakes, fisheries biologists have emplaced hundreds of underwater acoustic sensors on a grid network, stretching north to south and east to west at regular intervals. These sensors are black cylinders, roughly the diameter of a two-liter pop bottle and roughly the height of three 2L pop bottles stacked on top of each other. They are weighed down by special round 5 lb. concrete blocks. Sensors in water deeper than 30 feet remain in place year-round. Those in less than 30 feet of water can be remotely released in the fall and collected when they float to the surface. This prevents potential damage from ice and wave action over the winter. These sensors are placed back in the same spot each spring. Every time one of the tagged fish, which have small acoustic transponders (think about a 1/2-inch section of a toothpick) implanted into their abdominal cavities, swims within a couple hundred yards of a sensor in the grid, researchers receive a data point. By looking at the accumulated data points from individual fish and multiple fish, it can be determined how fish are moving throughout Lake Erie on a daily, weekly, monthly, and seasonal basis.

Lake Erie consists of the Eastern Basin (the deepest part) from Erie, PA over to Buffalo, NY; while the shallower Western Basin stretches westward from Erie, PA to Toledo, OH. GLATOS telemetry studies have shown Eastern Basin walleye stay in the Eastern Basin, while Western Basin walleye, especially the larger females, are more migratory and move east to deeper cooler water as the shallower Western Basin water warms. Mark shared that in 2003, the walleye population in Lake Erie really rebounded. The accidental introduction of round gobies, an invasive species from the Black Sea (via the ballast water of ships) provides an ample food supply for young walleye. Today's Lake Erie adult walleye population is estimated at 80 million! Studies have shown PA walleye stay in relatively the same area to spawn and live. Some of the data points from the GLATOS study are fascinating. Many walleye move from PA shores over to Ontario shores in only a few days and will go back and forth. Numerous Lake Erie walleye have swum up the Detroit River and now reside in Lake Huron. The most fascinating single fish was a tagged Lake Trout that surprisingly went over Niagara Falls and now resides in Lake Ontario. I learned so much from Mark Haffley's "Walleye Tagging & Telemetry Study" presentation. We are truly blessed to live relatively close to this tremendous freshwater resource!

God Bless, Be Safe, and Great Outdoors!

Fun Fact

Mushrooms are harvested year-round. The white button is the favorite variety in the U.S., with baby bellas, portabellas, oyster and shiitake also popular.

Mushrooms are 90% water, and they do not need sunlight to grow.

Mushrooms double in size in one day, and one acre can produce 1 million pounds of mushrooms annually.

DEAR PAW'S CORNER: My 13-year-old cat, "Tibbles," has suddenly developed a litter box problem. He pees quite a lot - I'm constantly scooping the box - but I have not seen any poo for about three days. Tibbles seems comfortable and doesn't seem distressed. - Jamie B. in Milwaukee

DEAR JAMIE: A significant change in litter box habits is a signal that something is going on, and you should call the veterinarian.

Cats are famously good at hiding illness. It's an instinctive trait to keep predators away. If they're feeling a bit off, you'll almost never notice. If they're seriously ill, they may hide themselves away. Senior cats like Tibbles become very secretive as their body ages. They walk more slowly and jump less if arthritis is developing. Their personality may change. They may yowl from discomfort or confusion.

Your cat may be developing a kidney problem, but to confirm this, you'll need to bring Tibbles to the vet for some tests. It would be helpful to collect a urine sample and a stool sample (if he goes before your visit), so the vet can present results faster. If you're not able to do that ahead of the visit, the vet may give you collection tools and instructions on how to get those samples and bring them in later.

Make sure that your cat is hydrating as well as possible. Keep his water bowl filled. Give him less dry kibble and more paté-style cat food. Limit his treats to just one or two pieces a day, or switch to a "lickable" treat (available in packets at most retailers).

The veterinarian will provide further dietary adjustments, and possibly medication, once they've observed and tested your cat. Follow their instructions precisely to help Tibbles become regular again. ©2025 King Features Synd., Inc.
